Historical Note

On December 8, 1965, representatives of eight governments and eight governmental agencies from the metropolitan and State levels met and approved legal documents officially creating the East-West Gateway Coordinating Council. The Council, represented both the Illinois and Missouri segments of the metropolitan area with over 2,000,000 people based on the 1960 census figures. The Council was designed as an organization through which individual counties and cities could successfully coordinate and formulate a comprehensive, long-range plan to solve area-wide problems. The Gateway Council, in effect, would be the voluntary forum through which local units of government guided the development of the St. Louis metropolitan area.

The area included the City of St. Louis, St. Louis County, St. Charles County, and Jefferson County in Missouri. In Illinois the area included St. Clair County, Madison County, and Monroe County.

St. Louis County Supervisor Lawrence K. Roos was named chairman of the Council. Mayor Alvin G. Fields of East St. Louis, Illinois, was named vice-chairman. Members of the Gateway's first Board of Directors were Clem A. Burges, Presiding Judge St. Charles County; A. J. Cervantes, Mayor, City of St. Louis; Frances J. Foley, Chairman, Board of Supervisors, St. Clair County; Paul T. Koenig, President, St. Louis County League of Municipalities; Harold Landholt, Chairman, Board of Supervisors, Madison County; and Barney Metz, President, Southwestern Illinois Council of Mayors.

The Council considered problems that were area-wide in nature such as transportation planning, including mass transit study, air pollution control, the planning of airport facilities, recreational planning, solid waste disposal, and open space utilization, and other matters of metropolitan concern.

The East-West Gateway Coordinating Council was the first metropolitan organization of its kind in the Nation to be formed following the passage of legislation in Congress calling for cooperation on the metropolitan level.

The East-West Gateway Council of Governments is still in operation as of 2006.
