Historical Note

As of 2011, the Information Services & Technology Department website describes this office as providing “enterprise services for the faculty, staff, schools and departments of Washington University. The core network is not only comprised of the network hardware that makes it work, but also includes the services and infrastructure to support the Core.” Earlier departments serving similar functions include Computing Facilities and the Network Coordinator office.

Scope and Content Notes

The publications produced by the Information Services & Technology Department regard computing and the network at Washington University. Most of the publications are newsletters with information about both specific computing concerns at Washington University and general tips on computing and network issues.
